New comic

Get ready to laugh

Check out the adventures of Detective Boogaloo in Metro's new comic, "Hip-Hop Cop," from award-winning Philadelphia artist Jamar Nicholas. It's the story of a break-dancing cop, superpowers and evil rappers who must be vanquished. Nicholas is the host of the podcast "Comic Book Diner," and his adaptation of "Fist Stick Knife Gun," a memoir about young adult violence, is taught in schools across the nation.

The Acro-Cats claw their way into town

Oh, paw-lease. Think you have cat-titude? Check out the funky tricks of these acrobatically trained cats.

To Samantha Martin, cats like to have jobs, just like people.

You can see their fondness for their vocation watching members of the Acro-Cats — the performing feline troupe that's prowling into Philadelphia this weekend — during their off-hours at Martin's home, she said.

"Sometimes, Sookie will just start rolling her barrel," Martin said of the cat trained to push objects on stage. "Now Tuna [a star of the show known for ringing bells] is touching the remote control, giving me that look like, 'Hey, you should do some work.' They actually ask to work. They enjoy it."

Safety concerns

Some cat circuses, especially in Russia, have a bad reputation.

- There is a boycott campaign against Moscow Cat Circus for alleged cruelty in their training methods — specifically training the cats to perform complex tricks by hurting them.
- Martin stressed that the Acro-Cats is a "go with the flow" performance with tricks that mostly just include performing the sorts of jumps and behavior that domestic cats typically perform at home.

Visit Metro.us to see more cats and find out where they're visiting.

Martin's performing cats — all former rescues, strays and orphans, and ranging from a part-Siamese to a Tuxedo, a Calico, a Tortoiseshell, a Ginger-and-white — live at her home in Chicago.

Martin, who is the "chief executive human" of the Acro-Cats, acknowledges that the show they put on is not a perfect performance.

"The cats kind of make up their own stuff sometimes," she said. "Every show is a little bit different because we never know what the cats are going to do and when they're going to do it."

"It's very ad-lib, very go with the flow. People can expect to see things they've never seen before."

The concept of the Acro-Cats was born 10 years ago when Martin, a lifelong animal lover, began taking a few trained cats into Chicago art galleries and doing small shows with basic props.

Audiences went wild, she said, so she began expanding the show. For Martin, who aspired to be an animal trainer from the age of 7, working with the Acro-Cats is "a dream come true."

The Acro-Cats and Tuna and the Rock Cats will be at the Painted Bride Arts Center July 9-12. The tour will continue to Brooklyn on July 16 and Boston on July 23. Proceeds go to the Philadelphia Community Cats Council. Some foster cats will also be at the performance for guests to adopt.

Q&A

Behind the scenes

Trainer Samantha Martin explains her trade:

How do you get the cats to do the tricks?
I use clicker training. It's all positive reinforcement where they get a treat when they do a trick. They're my pets, so I watch what they do around the house and I come up with things that can be made into a trick. So if the cats are climbing, I'll come up with something that involves climbing. If the cats are scratching, I'll come up with something that involves scratching. The props in the show — it's almost like their playground. They're very unpredictable.

How do the cats feel about their work?
They enjoy it. If you look at their body language, you'll see that they're happy, they're interested, they're not towering. If somebody startles them, they can go back to their carrier.

Can people bring their dogs?
No dogs allowed.

Islamophobia

Is 'Death to Islam' good for business? Yes, in York

Attention over a "Death to Islam" sign in its window has boosted business at a York bar, reports said.

On a recent visit to the bar, which features multiple "Death to Islam" signs inside and at least one on the exterior, TV station Fox43 found that according to staff, business has been on the upswing since their anti-Islam message was posted on social media.

Owner Jeff Seitz has defended the sign to media, telling the York Daily Record, "All my customers agree with me. ... Everybody says, 'I love your sign.'"

Death to Islam signs were posted inside the small bar after the September 11 attacks.

But the printed-out signs in the window were posted more recently. York Muslims said they feel the sign is a threat.

"When you're calling for death of a religion — how would you kill Islam?" resident Rabiya Khan told the Record.

"You would kill all the Muslims. You can't kill a religion; you kill the followers of a religion."

The Council on American-Islamic Relations has also picked up on the sign, and say it is Islamophobic.

Gov. Tom Wolf hails from York. The governor's office did not respond to a request for comment.

Camping explored to house papal pilgrims

Catholics gather overnight ahead of a visit by Pope Francis in Ecuador. / GETTY IMAGES

Pope Francis. Planners are wondering whether to let World Meeting of Families guests camp in city parks.

Planners from the World Meeting of Families have floated the idea of allowing people to camp in public parks for the papal visit.

Details are scarce, too scarce to call it a plan. We don't know which parks they'll allow people to camp in, how the city and meeting planners will handle security, sanitation, campfires or s'mores.

But there are talks.

Mark Focht, deputy mayor for parks and recreation, said that planners have raised the subject with his department.

Focht said his department is waiting for a formal proposal.

The need for additional space for visitors might seem obvious. Officials expect 1.5 million people to visit the city over the weekend of Pope Francis' expected Mass of the Benjamin Franklin Parkway.

It's doubtful that the city's hotels could accommodate a crowd of that size.

Planners from the World Meeting say this discussion is very preliminary. Their website does have listings of campsites in the region — many of them in the Poconos.

Massive crowds

Philly could be splitting its britches when crowds come into town for the World Meeting of Families.

- "With upward of 1.5 million people expected to visit Philadelphia during the Papal Visit, the World Meeting of Families - Philadelphia 2015 is working hand-in-hand with the City of Philadelphia to best accommodate the domestic and international guests this September, and are considering a variety of options for lodging, including camping," planners said.

Crime scene tape surrounds the Century 16 movie theater where 12 people were killed in a shooting rampage on July 23, 2012, in Aurora, Colorado. / GETTY IMAGES

Philly professor testifies at trial of Aurora killer

Mental illness. A UPenn professor testified about the mental health of movie theater mass murderer James Holmes.

The prosecutor in Colorado's movie massacre trial attacked the testimony of the defense's star witness, the director of the University of Pennsylvania's Schizophrenia Research Center, on Wednesday, challenging her diagnosis that the gunman, James Holmes, suffers schizophrenia and could not tell right from wrong.

Holmes, 27, could face the death penalty if convicted of killing a dozen people and wounding 70 when he opened fire inside a packed midnight premiere of the Batman film "The Dark Knight Rises" at a Denver-area multiplex in July 2012.

Holmes has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity.

Testifying for the defense, Raquel Gur, the research center's director, told jurors she believes Holmes suffers from schizophrenia and was not in control of his actions.

A "severe defect" in the defendant's brain meant he could not distinguish right from wrong when he committed the crime, said Gur, who once examined Unabomber Ted Kaczynski and Arizona mass murderer Jared Loughner.

Two court-appointed psychiatrists have testified Holmes was sane when he planned and carried out the attack.

His lawyers say he heard voices in his head commanding him to kill, and that he believes he added to his "human capital," or worth, through the murders.

"The delusion persists ... to this day," Gur said. REUTERS

"In my professional opinion it is schizophrenia. All the characteristics of schizophrenia were present at the time of the commission of the crime."

High school AV tech charged for relationship with student

A high school technician was arrested on charges of having a sexual relationship with a 12th grade student who was under 18 during part of the relationship, investigators revealed Wednesday.

Michael Evan Morse, an audio visual technician at Plymouth Whitemarsh High School, was arraigned Wednesday on sexual assault charges.

Police first received a report about "inappropriate communications" between Morse and the student on June 5.

The investigation found that the two between December 2014 and June 2015 communicated via thousands of text messages and daily phone calls, with much of the communications being sexual in nature.

Deleted texts were recovered from the victim's phone documenting the relationship. She said Morse told her to delete them. METRO

Weird. Joyride in fire truck lands woman back in Delaware jail

Police in Delaware said they arrested a woman on Tuesday for joyriding in a fire company pickup truck — and crashing it — right after she had been released from police custody for a traffic violation.

Cuve Harding, 43, was detained Monday night for failing to show up for court for traffic citations.

Fire officials didn't know the bright red, fully marked truck was gone from the parking lot of New Castle County police headquarters until they received word it was in an accident.

Police believe a spare key may have been inside the vehicle.

Police eventually arrested Harding after she tried to return it.

Harding, of Hockessin, Delaware, is charged with motor vehicle theft and related offenses. DAN KELLEY

Health

Ebola not in New Jersey

The New Jersey Department of Health said there is no Ebola in Lakewood, New Jersey, after media reported a person had been hospitalized with "Ebola-like" symptoms after a trip to Africa.

Health officials said the man had traveled to a country where Ebola was not prevalent.

He was diagnosed with a "travel-related" illness. METRO

This week's highlight in City Paper: Jail woes

Philly. Here's what in store for readers.

City Paper this week examines Philadelphia's House of Correction, which has a locking system so antiquated that if there were a fire, guards would have to open cell doors one by one. The building, which dates to 1874, is riddled with leaky pipes, cracked ceilings and skuzzy floors. City Councilman Bobby Henon says keeping 1,500 prisoners in this crumbling facility is inhumane, not to mention a money drain. He's crafted a bill to buy nearby land for a new jail to replace the House of Correction. But a lot of neighbors of the jail, city-school advocates and even prison reformers — don't think a new jail is the answer.

This week's City Paper cover / CITY PAPER

Other highlights:

Theater critic David Anthony Fox reviews two of Philly's newest offerings. New theater company Orbiter 3's Moon Man Walk is "both sweet and sad," the story of a man whose father was part of the first moon mission. Bearded Ladies Cabaret's Bitter Homes and Gardens, meanwhile, is all about the earth — a 'beguiling plea for vegetation' featuring singing and dancing vegetables. It's "adorable."

Ari Miller has become the maven of cured meats in Philly with his line of specialty bacon. Spanish smoked paprika bacon, anyone? Now, his business, 1732 Meats, is expanding its line of charcuterie and soon will be on the menus of even more fine Philly restaurants.

"Famous Body Parts of Philadelphia" — this week's full-page comic — is all about blood and butts, and related stu ff. With steely nerves and whimsical humor, artist Andrea Tsurumi shines a light on a few of this city's scientific and historical oddities.

Technical glitch halts NYSE for more than three hours

Homeland Security. The agency said there were no signs that the problems stemmed from "malicious activity."

A trader waits for trading to resume. / GETTY IMAGES

A technical glitch forced the New York Stock Exchange to suspend trading for more than three hours on Wednesday in the biggest outage to strike a U.S. financial market in nearly two years, unnerving investors already rattled by the meltdown in Chinese stocks and the Greek debt crisis.

The exchange, a unit of Intercontinental Exchange Inc. (ICE.N), said the halt, which occurred shortly after 11:30 a.m. EDT and lasted until 3:10 p.m., was not the result of a cyberattack. Other exchanges were trading normally.

"It's not a good day, and I don't feel good for our customers who are having to deal with the fallout," NYSE President Thomas Farley told CNBC during the halt.

Traders awaited the reopening anxiously because much of the business on the NYSE happens when portfolio managers put in orders designed to occur at the exact market close to ensure end-of-day pricing.

The NYSE accounts for more than 60 percent of S&P 500 volume at the close of the market, according to Credit Suisse analyst Ana Avramovic. Most of this is at the "market on close," when those orders are processed for funds and institutions.

"If you don't have all the orders on that marketplace on the close, the pricing on the close would be definitely not accurate," said Empire Executions Inc. President Peter Costa, who trades on the NYSE floor.

The U.S. market was down more than 1 percent on Wednesday, as investors continue to focus on turmoil in China and Greece. REUTERS

CLINTON SKEPTICS

Opinion

TOM FOREMAN
POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT FOR CNN

CNN=POLITICS

I'm not big on conspiracy theories or folkloric fantasies. I do not think the Loch Ness monster is real. I don't believe there was a second assassin on the grassy knoll. And I have no reason to suspect Donald Rumsfeld is a replicant. The main reason for my feelings is the utter lack of evidence. And yet, just spend one late night listening to talk radio, and you will know that true believers persist — folks who are completely on board with the idea of UFOs, chupacabras and grandpa's ghost rattling around in the attic.

So my skeptical tendencies crackle when candidate Hillary Clinton hints at some old mythology about a vast right-wing conspiracy aimed squarely at her. She did it this past week when my colleague at CNN, Brianna Keilar, asked her why so many voters feel the former first lady, senator and secretary of state is untrustworthy.

Without a blink, Clinton said, "People should and do trust me." Then she added that any such perception is being created by a "barrage of attacks that are largely fomented by and coming from the right." Harrumph.

To be sure, there are plenty of people on the conservative side who will do damn near anything to defeat her. They will raise money, they will spread lies (and embarrassing truths) and they will attack at every opportunity. But we have a name for that. It's called hardball politics.

No, the conspiracy she should perhaps worry about is not on the right. It is within her own camp, and it is being fed by those who think she can simply push aside real polls of real voters who have real questions. History suggests she can and must respond with real answers. Because the worst foe of almost every campaign is not a legendary beast creeping through the shadows of Pennsylvania Avenue, but the myths the candidates tell themselves rather than facing up to the truth.

NSA tapped German chancellery for decades: WikiLeaks

The U.S. National Security Agency tapped phone calls involving German Chancellor Angela Merkel and her closest advisers for years and spied on the staff of her predecessors, WikiLeaks said.

A report released by the group suggested NSA spying on Merkel and her staff had gone on far longer and more widely than previously realized.

WikiLeaks said the NSA targeted for long-term surveillance 125 phone numbers of top German officials.

The release risks renewing tensions between Germany and the U.S. a month after they sought to put a row over spying behind them, with U.S. President Barack Obama declaring in Bavaria that the two nations were "inseparable allies."

WikiLeaks published what it said were three NSA intercepts of Merkel's conversations, and data it said listed telephone numbers for the chancellor, her aides, her office and even her fax machine.

"The names associated with some of the targets indicate that spying on the Chancellery predates Angela Merkel as it includes staff of former Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder (in office 1998-2002), and his predecessor Helmut Kohl," WikiLeaks added in a statement. REUTERS

Baltimore fires Police Commissioner

Baltimore Mayor Stephanie Rawlings-Blake has fired Police Commissioner Anthony Batts, the mayor's office said on Wednesday.

Batts will be replaced on an interim basis by Deputy Commissioner Kevin Davis, the mayor's office said in a statement.

Batts had headed the department during unrest triggered by the death of Freddie Gray, who died in April from an injury sustained in police custody. REUTERS

Bill would make social media report 'terrorist activity'

Social media operators such as Twitter, Facebook and YouTube would have to notify federal authorities of online "terrorist activity," according to a bill approved by Senate Intelligence Committee.

The types of communication include postings related to "explosives, destructive devices and weapons of mass destruction," according to the text..

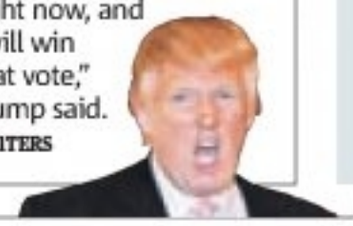
The main purpose was to give social media companies additional legal protection if they reported to the authorities on traffic circulated by their users, rather than coerce them to spy on users. REUTERS

Trump says 'I'll win the Latino vote'

Republican Donald Trump said he would win the Latino vote if he gets his party's nomination for president and claimed a "great relationship with the Mexican people," despite recent comments about immigrants that have cost him business.

"I'll win the Latino vote. I will win it," Trump said in an excerpt of an interview with NBC News released on Wednesday. He said he would be better able to create jobs as president than Jeb Bush or Hillary Clinton.

"I will create jobs, and the Latinos will have jobs that they don't have right now, and I will win that vote," Trump said. REUTERS



Cosby statue removed from Disney theme park in Florida

A bronze bust of beleaguered comedian Bill Cosby was removed from the Walt Disney World theme park in Florida, a Disney spokeswoman said.

The spokeswoman said the bust was part of an outdoor exhibit at Disney's Hollywood Studios park in Orlando that honors members of the Television Academy Hall of Fame.

Disney gave no reason for the removal. REUTERS

Fossil. Who is Wendy and why is this dinosaur named after her?

It's not every day a dinosaur gets named after you, so Canadian fossil hunter Wendy Sloboda celebrated in a unique way.

"I got a new tattoo of my dinosaur recently to show it off. It is pretty exciting for me," said Sloboda, who first spotted the fossils of the dinosaur now named Wendiceratops in southern Alberta's remote badlands.

Scientists on Wednesday announced the discovery of Wendiceratops, a 20-foot-long, two-ton beast with a prominent, upright horn atop its nose and a series of short, forward-curling hooks adorning a bony, shield-like frill at the back of its head.

They said Wendiceratops, which lived 79 million years ago during the Cretaceous Period, provides insight into the early evolution of horned dinosaurs, a prominent group of four-legged herbivores including the well-known Triceratops that lived near the end of the age of dinosaurs.

Quoted

"We suspect that the skull ornamentation may have been a visual cue that allowed these animals to recognize each other over a long distance."

Michael Ryan, Cleveland Museum of Natural History paleontologist

"Wendiceratops is a truly eye-catching dinosaur. With its array of gnarly horns curling forward off the back of its frill and its tall nose horn, it is without a doubt one of the most highly ornamented members of the horned dinosaur family, which is well known for their spiky skulls," paleontologist David Evans of the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto said.

Wendiceratops lived in a lush, warm coastal plain near the inland sea that bisected North America at the time, cropping plants with its parrot-like beak.

Sloboda in 2010 spotted fossils including parts of the frill sticking out of a mud rock layer at the bottom of a hill north of Montana's border. Fossils of three adults and one juvenile Wendiceratops have been identified.

"Wendy is one of the most talented dinosaur hunters in the world. She has a sixth sense for finding important fossils," Evans said.

Sloboda has scoured far-flung locales including Argentina, Mongolia, France and Greenland, and made her first important fossil finds when she was still just a teenager. She'll be reminded of Wendiceratops, meaning "Wendy's horned face," every time she looks at that tattoo on her forearm. WILL DUNHAM, METRO

Ryan Reynolds fights to stop a shady body-swapping company in "Self/less." FOCUS FEATURES

THE FUN STARTS HERE

Ryan Reynolds on wealth and death

The "Self/less" star won't be spending money cloning himself.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

In the new sci-fi thriller "Self/less," Ben Kingsley plays a dying wealth monster who literally changes into Ryan Reynolds, thanks to a revolutionary, possibly sketchy procedure that transfers one's consciousness into new bodies.

But it wasn't anxiety over his own mortality that drew Reynolds to the project.

"It was the idea of hubris and arrogance and the class system, and all these things that propel a person to say, 'Oh, I cocked up the first life. Let me just buy another one.' It's just so vile to think like that," Reynolds tells us. "I like seeing characters fall from grace, and I like seeing characters accept or deal with consequences."

Reynolds dishes on friends with money and how glad he is that his latest won't get a sequel.

You play a character who doesn't know what to do with his riches.

I know a couple of people who are at that level of obscene wealth. There's something perverse about their lives, especially when they're young. There's this quest for thrills that is ever growing. I know one guy who just does some of the most insane s— you can imagine. Maybe it's because he's experienced so much already. He's always owned the fastest cars, the coolest planes. After a while, it becomes a law of diminishing returns. There's a lack of well-being with these people. Not all of them — just particular ones.

Not every rich person is terrible and bored.

Not at all! I know wealthy people who are truly wonderful. And people like Bill Gates — those guys are going to die and leave 20, 30 billion dollars to charity. That's spectacular, if you ask me.

"Self/less" seems rare, not only in that it's a character-driven, ideas-driven sci-fi movie, but also that it's a one-off, not a franchise movie. I can't imagine there being a "Self/less 2."

Oh God, no! But that's great, isn't it? It's refreshing that there are some films like that still. It's scary, because everything's a franchise now. It does kill off the one-off movies — the small films by Screen Gems or Focus Features. It's getting harder and harder to finance those movies. I'm worried for the future, in the sense that one day, 12 months a year, it's just going to be franchise films. Even at awards season, it will be franchise movies that will collect all the gold. It's a rare breed these days to have a one-off.

You still occasionally get to do something small, like your forthcoming gambling drama "Mississippi Grind."

I always try to do those. I love those. "Buried" was one of those. "The Voices" was one of those — the smaller ones that sometimes just play festival circuits. But to me, they're everything. I love, love doing them.

'Minions' has Minions, and that's good enough

Here's an image of a bunch of Minions, from the motion picture "Minions." UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'Minions'

Directors: Pierre Coffin, Kyle Balda
Voices of: Pierre Coffin, Sandra Bullock
Rating: PG

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

"Minions" is part of a new, odd, mostly welcome trend: loopy spinoffs of franchises that are already plenty loopy. Not as strange or funny as "Penguins of Madagascar," the "Despicable Me" offshoot mostly offers that film's vast army of baby babbling yellow whatzits. That's fine. If all it was was 90 minutes of Minions reading the phone book, all would be well, especially since they'd do it in a made-up language that's far cooler than Jodie Foster's in "Nell" though not nearly as cool as Milla Jovovich's in "The Fifth Element."

"Minions" does slightly more than that. It shows three randomly chosen Minions — all voiced by co-director Pierre Coffin, who truly deserves a special Oscar — hobnobbing with a less trustworthy supervillain: a tricked-out lady baddie named Scarlett Overkill (a game Sandra Bullock). The action takes place in England (for some reason) in the '60s (for some reason), and at one point there's an attempt to steal the crown, which then segues into a brief remake of "King Ralph" — again, for some reason.

What follows is zany but never particularly inspired. What it does have — and this truly can't be emphasized enough — is Minions. They could be doing anything and it would be entertaining, and sometimes in "Minions" the bar is indeed set that low. May the deserved sequel step up its game, though if it doesn't that will be OK, too, because Minions are objectively adorable.

Ryan Reynolds tries to find out if paying for the services from a shady company was worth it in "Self/less." MAGNOLIA PICTURES

'Self/less'
Director: Tarsem Singh
Stars: Ryan Reynolds, Natalie Martinez

In "Self/less" Ben Kingsley's Damian, wealthy and dying, becomes Ryan Reynolds, after a miraculous, shady company (run by a creepy Brit, played by Matthew Goode) offers a radical procedure that transfers consciousness from one body to the next. But there's a catch, because there's always a catch, because science, in the movies, can never just be awesome.

The premise cribs from the John Frankenheimer classic "Seconds" and the nonclassic "Freejack." But theft isn't the problem. It's when the script tries to do something more than mix and match influences that it reveals the true paucity of ideas. Reynolds' Damian soon learns the company is engaged in some rote jiggery-pokery. He also learns that he has some Jason Bourne moves, because those movies are popular too.

One can tease heady ideas out of "Self/less" — about our fear of mortality, about self-preservation turning to solipsism, even about wealth running roughshod over those without it. They're notions best discussed after, or thought about during, given how slowly and wearily it's heading toward its so-so climax. There's so much talent and narrative and thematic possibility in its favor that it often feels like it went out of its way to be forgettable. No future movie will be ripping it off. MP

‘Amy’ summons the young, personable Amy Winehouse

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

“Amy” has gobs of archival footage of doomed musician Amy Winehouse. A24

‘Amy’

Director: Asif Kapadia
Genre: Documentary
Rating: R

In her last years, Amy Winehouse was mostly visible as a troubled, makeup-smeared slave to drugs and drink, splattered all over tabloids and articles that blabbed, often with jokes, about how far she’d fallen. But once this era arrives in the intimate Winehouse doc “Amy,” director Asif Kapadia doesn’t fill the screen with such overplayed images. When the musician disappears down a drug hole, we’re made to feel her loss on a gut level, particularly given how the film’s first half prominently boasted the young, pre-fame, absolutely chooglin’ Winehouse.

“Amy” arrives on the heels of a film that is superficially the same, namely Brett Morgen’s “Kurt Cobain: Montage of Heck.” Both have the same general aims: to rescue a doomed musical legend from the public view of them and to portray fame as something, at least in their cases, antithetical to artistic creation. The two films share something else in common: They are almost entirely made with footage that isn’t people sitting in front of cameras, vomiting up exposition and opinions.

It can be disarming, given her turbulent public image in her final days, to see the young, unfailingly personable Winehouse, with truly British teeth, bop about, charming people left and right. Kapadia is careful and gentle when it comes to how to portray the unraveling Winehouse. The images become more abrasive; there are untold shots of paparazzi hounding her, their flashbulbs flashing like machine gun fire. “Amy” is best used as a gutting portrayal of a life force that would have been better off not being the kind of person who earns a film like “Amy.”

Alan Rickman hates the word 'villain'

The actor turns director for a "Little Chaos" and has a nice take on his "Die Hard" character.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Alan Rickman directed himself in the small role of Louis XIV in his second film, "A Little Chaos," now in theaters and on VOD. FOCUS FEATURES

Alan Rickman is a nice guy. He's not sinister like some of his more famous characters. He will point out that, technically, he's only played three villains, and one of them isn't "Harry Potter"'s Snape. And even "Die Hard"'s Hans Gruber isn't really a villain. Rickman has had a diverse career, even playing nice romantic leads in "Truly Madly Deeply" and "Sense and Sensibility." He also, occasionally, directs. The period drama "A Little Chaos" is such an effort, starring Kate Winslet as a woman tasked with designing a garden at Versailles for Louis XIV, played, briefly, by Rickman himself.

The film takes a feminist angle on the past, and like many feminist films set in the past, it exists as a comment on the present. What do you think it most has to say about our times?

Well, in the court of Louis XIV, women are born into the job of standing around looking pretty. And when they get too old or fat, they're out.

You haven't directed a film since 1997's "The Winter Guest," though you've directed your share of theater since. How did you get back to thinking visually?

It never leaves me because it was shoved in there when I was in art school, to the great expense of the British taxpayer. It was five years of art school and three years of running a design group. And then it sat on the shelf for a while, but it doesn't leave you. I can look around a room and talk about a color or the relationship of an object to another object, or about how you would use a space. That's drummed into you. Once I was free to direct this film, that was the part that attracted me. From the word go, I could see a green hillside and a horse and a carriage and a tree. Then you develop the picture. It's an abstract — a Rothko, if you were working in greens and horizontals. Then you lead the eye somewhere else.

Film is a medium so reliant on money. I imagine when you're doing a period film with relatively little money...

[Mimes a small amount of money with his thumb and forefinger]

...you have to learn to be resourceful.

It seems to me you need to be quite picky about what you use — although this one had some lushness, because it's Louis XIV and it's Versailles. But we were shooting in England, so there was that. But there are, however, 17th-century French interiors we nicked and put into English buildings. So that's available to us. And then it's about being selective and knowing from experience that limitations can be a good thing. People who've got everything available to them — that's a bit like swimming in … s—. [Laughs] We weren't. [Laughs] For example, the script had a scene that had me as Louis making a speech to a courtroom of courtiers. I said, "We can't shoot that; it's too expensive. So how about rewriting the scene so it's him practicing the same speech in front of his kids?" It's a lot cheaper and I think a much better way of doing it.

Despite playing iconic villains, you've managed to mostly stay away from them. Would you play a villain character again if there was a good script?

I understand the word "character," and I understand the words "good script." But I don't understand that other word. Because it doesn't mean anything to me. Because the last thing you can do is put a label on it. Far as I'm concerned, Hans Gruber is very smart, incredibly polite, wants something, knows how to get it and unfortunately doesn't succeed. [Laughs]

Is this the weirdest Kim Kardashian venture yet?

Kim.Guru is a Kardashian-centric weather app.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

There are a lot of people out there who talk smack about the Kardashians, but there are even more who can't get enough of reality TV's royal family.

Consider this: Kim Kardashian's first app, Kim Kardashian: Hollywood, racked up $200 million last year, according to Bloomberg. Think of all the bodycon dresses she can buy with a cut of that.

Now, a new Kardashian app, Kim.Guru, is out, this time reporting the weather and what Kardashian would wear. On Tuesday, for example, Kim.Guru's forecast was 82 degrees with a chance of rain, and the Kardashian-approved outfit would be black pants, open-toed heels and a black tunic/robe with no shirt underneath. Aren't you glad you know that so you can be like Kim — even if it violates your office's dress code?

Kim.Guru is a collaboration between Bullett magazine and Bravo. "Rain or shine, Kim has an outfit," the app promises. Who needs Al Roker when we can get a style forecast?

Christina Perri: 'I've learned it's OK to be vulnerable'

Plus other lessons she's learned in her 20s, so far.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

As any Christina Perri fan can tell you, Perri gets heartbreak. Between "I Don't Wanna Break," "Jar of Hearts," "Shot Me In The Heart" and her roughly dozen other songs about that feeling of utter despair that hits you during a split, chances are if you've ever made a breakup playlist, she's on it.

"I've finally figured out why," Perri tells us on her knack for writing about the painful side of love. "When you're happy, your time is spent with that person who is making you happy. But when you're recovering, you're putting that somewhere."

From her moment to the audience's

You'd think belting out songs night after night about a devastating time in her life would be rough, but Perri doesn't see it that way. "I feel like the relationships that ended really s—ty, I'm thankful for the songs I do have about them because that's how I got through it," she says.

"When I perform them, the songs aren't really mine anymore. I already went through whatever I was going through for each song." She says at that point, the song belongs to the audience and how it played a part in their lives. "The audience is that missing piece,"

Lessons learned

Despite her library of sad songs, Perri says she's been falling in and out of love throughout her 20s, and she's learned a lot of lessons along the way. "I've learned it's OK to be vulnerable and in my vulnerability, I've been able to find the things that make me happy."

And there's a reason why she's looking forward to entering her 30s in a couple years. "Your 20s is when you're the most exposed," she says. "You're vulnerable because you're trying to put together your life, career and relationships while finding a place in the world where you belong. That's pretty intense."

All about the girls

For now, the relationships she's most excited to talk about are her ones with tour mates Colbie Caillat and Rachel Platten. "Colbie and Rachel are two of my favorite girls in the music industry, so touring with them this summer is going to be the best time ever," she says. "I just imagine us all nerding out, being girly and having a good time."

Jake Miller wipes his heart

The young, of-the-moment rapper cut his teeth playing the sensitive card, but for now, he just wants to have fun.

Sorry, ladies. Jake Miller is taken and still with high school sweetheart Madison Bertini. JOSEPH CULTICE

Jake Miller is known as the sensitive rapper. This is, after all, a guy whose first song that garnered major radio play ("A Million Lives") is constructed of lyrics lifted straight from his fan mail and is about how his music comforted a fan with cancer and helped another deal with her brother's death.

But the 22-year-old, whose new EP "Rumors" came out yesterday, has recently switched gears, putting out a new single, "Dazed and Confused," that's essentially just a fun summer party song. "I've always been about putting out music with a message behind it, but I also want to make people dance," Miller tells us. "I just wanted to have a really fun song to put out for the summer."

Drunk in love

The song is about a guy who is either in love or, well, just really drunk. "How do you know if you're in love? That's a great question," Miller says, really thinking about it, perhaps with his own girlfriend in mind.

"I think if you look at the person you're with, and you see someone you can spend the rest of your life with, you're best friends with and want to spend every second with, then you're probably in love. If you're at a party, and you can't really see straight, that probably means that you drank too much, and you're not in love."

Bonding on the road

Miller says his best friends are people he works with, like his drummer, tour manager, DJ and videographers. "I feel like I've known them longer than my childhood friends because we travel every single day together [on tour]," he says. One childhood friend that he is still close with is Edgar Esteves, who directed his "Dazed and Confused" music video.

"We came up with [the video concept] together and just wanted to do a fun, abstract, weird video," Miller says. "We had dancing fruits. We had my head floating in a refrigerator." The video also features fellow teen heartthrob Austin Mahone, as well as rapper Travie McCoy, who has a verse in the song.

Back to basics

While Miller is all for focusing on fun right now, he has every intention of going back to getting deeper when the tour is over and he heads back in the studio. "You always have to grow as an artist, and nothing has stopped with the whole storytelling stuff that I used to do," he says. "I'm going to write about whatever I'm experiencing at that time in my life. My music is always going to be about me."

Aries You will have no difficulty finishing all the tasks on your to-do list. Harness your excess energy and help a friend or relative who is in need of assistance.

Taurus Don't move forward based on second-hand information. If you are looking for the truth, ask someone who has always been on your side.

Gemini An opportunity to meet a special someone who shares your goals and can impact your future will develop if you volunteer.

Cancer Someone will get the wrong impression. Be sure to not lead anyone on. Be as blunt and honest as you can to avoid a misunderstanding.

Leo Focus on what would make you happy. Day-to-day stress will leave you feeling out of control. Plan a short trip to shake up your routine.

Virgo Moneymaking opportunities are present. Be prepared to act quickly if you are offered a great deal. Investments will enrich your life.

Libra Get out and mingle with people who share your interests. Join a sports team, club or class that will stimulate or challenge and inspire you.

Scorpio If you have been ignoring your physical health, it's time to get back in shape. Even a few minutes of exercise each day will invigorate you.

Sagittarius Leave your worries behind you and get out with friends. Enjoy a movie or a cultural or sporting event, or go on a short trip to shake things up.

Capricorn You will be tempted to give personal advice. Tensions will mount if you meddle. Keep your opinions to yourself and avoid a rift in the relationship.

Aquarius Love is in the air. You will be more outgoing than usual, so host a party. Your special flair will ensure a fun day and plenty of compliments.

Pisces Learning more about your family history is a stimulating hobby. Ask relatives or search on the Internet in order to find clues about your heritage.

The new comfort food

Scott Schroeder's upcoming Hungry Pigeon will serve an "unpretentious" menu.

A.D. AMOROSI
@ MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Scott Schroeder has a taste for nostalgic fare. As executive chef of American Sardine Bar and South Philly Tap Room, he's held Spam-themed events and proudly served up hot peanut butter sandwiches. Last Sunday in Queen Village, Schroeder and chef/pal Pat O'Malley were horsing around outside of the pair's first joint acquisition, Hungry Pigeon, opening this fall at Fourth and Fitzwater.

"I'm spinning my wheels until we're ready, so for now I'm Mr. Fix-It," says O'Malley, a New Yorker who worked at Balthazar Bakery until he purchased the Hungry Pigeon space with Schroeder. "Just like our menu, everything's from scratch," adds Schroeder, pointing toward where the counter/bar and open kitchen will go in Hungry Pigeon's 1,200-square-foot space.

The pair met working at the now-defunct Pasion over a decade ago, and stayed friends. They both want to serve what Schroeder calls "unpretentious, straight-ahead" food.

From its organic wine, beer and simple booze list ("We're no cocktail joint," says O'Malley) to its fresh, uncomplicated menu, Hungry Pigeon will be a down-home dining experience. "We're serving a chef's version of what we eat and drink at home," says Schroeder.

Pro potluck

On Sunday, Schroeder ("I'm the savory guy") and O'Malley ("I'm pastry") host a unique crowdfunding effort to finish the build-out: A potluck dinner party at artist Isaiah Zagar's 1002 Watkins Street warehouse, reflecting Hungry Pigeon's comfort food menu.

Like any potluck, the host and guests will both supply dishes — the twist here is that many of those guests will be among the city's top chefs, including Jen Carroll, Ben Puchowitz, George Sabatino and Joe Cicala.

"I gave them zero direction, except not to do things they'd make at their restaurants," says Schroeder. "I want them to cook what they'd make for themselves at home."

The fundraiser potluck is open to the public. Tickets are $100 and being sold at HungryPigeonPhilly.com.

Scott Schroeder and Pat O'Malley are opening Hungry Pigeon.

INSIGHT GUIDES

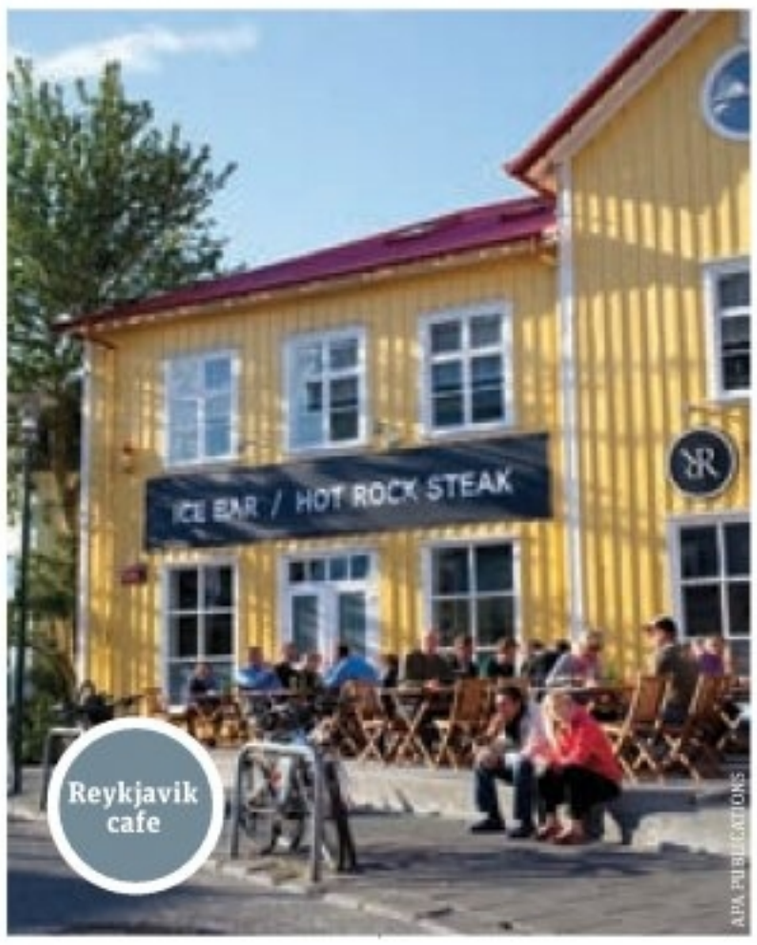
TRAVEL WEEKLY

WWW.INSIGHTGUIDES.COM TRAVEL WEEKLY, PHILADELPHIA, WEEKEND, JULY 9-12, 2015

24 hours in Iceland

Icelandair has been expanding the number of North American airports it flies from, and passengers can spend up to seven days in Iceland when traveling to or from Europe with no increase in the airfare.

The airline now operates flights out of 15 airports in the U.S. and Canada, from Anchorage to Washington, D.C. Many passengers are dipping their toes into Iceland, metaphorically speaking, to see what the island has to offer for a one-night stay — or even just a few hours, if timetables allow it. So what can you do in a day?



Keflavik International Airport is an easy 45-minute drive from Reykjavik, with shuttle buses meeting flights and with taxis and rental cars also available. Reykjavik is smaller than most European capitals, with a population of only about 120,000, but it has plenty to offer. There are several museums, including the National Museum of Iceland, the Reykjavik Art Museum, the Vikin Maritime Museum and the Reykjavik Open Air Museum.

The city's distinctive architecture includes the Hallgrimskirkja, which is the largest church in Iceland, completed in 1986 after 38 years of work. Its remarkable design is said to resemble an Icelandic lava flow. The equally remarkable modern architecture of the Harpa Reykjavik Concert Hall and Conference Centre is also worth seeing, in its setting by the waterfront.

Reykjavik is a compact city that is easy to walk around and has a good variety of hotels, bars, shops and restaurants. Some of these serve a traditional Icelandic menu, which might include smoked puffin, marinated minke whale and smoked shag. Needless to say, the seafood is excellent — but Icelanders also have a liking for hot dogs! The most popular eating place on the island is the hot dog stand Bæjarins Beztu Pylsur, which has been near Reykjavik Harbor since 1937.

Be sure to join a tour of some kind that takes you out into the unique Icelandic landscape. It isn't surprising that the country was chosen as a filming location for "Game of Thrones," as the country definitely has an otherworldly feel to it. Nothing prepares you for Iceland.

INSIGHT GUIDES | MIKE GERRARD AND DONNA DAILEY

Don't miss

Three Icelandic highlights

1 Blue Lagoon
These hot springs in a lava field are one of the island's most popular attractions. The Blue Lagoon is only a 20-minute drive from the airport, and many people combine a visit here with their airport transfer.

2 Golden Circle
Several companies offer this popular tour option as a daytrip from Reykjavik. It takes in the Gullfoss waterfall, several geysers, a volcanic crater, the Thingvellir National Park and other natural and man-made attractions.

3 Vatnajokull National Park
The second-largest national park in Europe is filled with natural wonders, such as the Skaftafell ice cave and the peak of Hvannadalshnukur, the highest point on the island at 6,921 feet.

Set sail on the bay in Annapolis

A mix of history, adventure, culture, shopping and great food in a picture-postcard nautical setting makes Annapolis, Maryland, a top vacation destination.

BOB PETERSON

Maryland State House

Annapolis is a colonial city transported to the 21st century. The heart of the city, from the harbor to the state Capitol, boasts buildings George Washington strolled past, since converted into galleries, shops, restaurants and businesses.

To get the town's backstory, go for a walk with costumed guides, a trolley tour or a jogging tour. Or download the free app Annapolis NOW for a self-guided tour.

On a breezy afternoon, there are so many sails on the bay that it looks like a whiteout on the water. The dock of Annapolis Harbor is nicknamed "Ego Alley" for the parade of sailboats, power boats and yachts circling past the promenade.

Annapolis is home to the U.S. Naval Academy. Guided tours leave from the Armel-Leftwich Visitor Center. You need a photo ID to enter. Plan your visit to see the noon formation when the entire 4,000-member Brigade of Midshipmen assembles in the courtyard.

The Chesapeake Bay means plenty of seafood to eat. The traditional crab feast involves crabs steamed in beer with a generous coating of Old Bay Seasoning, corn on the cob, cole slaw, cold drinks and many paper towels.

The Annapolis visitors' website, VisitAnnapolis.org, has an easy, interactive build-your-own-visit option as well as several suggested itineraries, links to vacation packages and other information.

Okafor back in action

Jahlil Okafor will be back in action Thursday when the Sixers take on Utah in summer league play. Okafor had 13 points and nine rebounds against Boston and 20 points and nine rebounds against San Antonio earlier this week.

Flyers' hated rivals make some big roster upgrades

NHL. Winning the Metro division will prove to be difficult.

While most of the Flyers' moves this offseason positioned them better in terms of the cap for this season and beyond, they didn't necessarily tip the needle with the on-ice product. However, there were teams in their division who did make potential landscaping changes that could separate them from the pack. So let's take a look at which organizations in the Metropolitan Division made the largest strides.

1 Penguins
Jim Rutherford made a blockbuster trade for the second straight summer to bolster his already dynamic offense. One year after shipping 40-goal scorer James Neal to the Predators for Patric Hornqvist and Nick Spaling, the second-year GM completed a nine-player swap that netted the Penguins forward Phil Kessel. While it cost the Penguins a slew of former and future first-round draft picks, the Pens added another lethal goal scorer to play alongside Sidney Crosby and Evgeni Malkin.

2 Capitals
Like the Pens, the Caps rattled some cages for the second offseason in a row. They vastly improved their defense last season with the signings of Brooks Orpik and Matt Niskanen, and this year they upgraded the offense by signing Justin Williams and trading for T.J. Oshie. The latter, a highly skilled player, will complement stars Alex Ovechkin (the league's leading goal scorer last season) and Nicklas Backstrom (assists leader), while Williams brings clutch playoff performances to a team that fell one victory shy of reaching the conference finals.

3 Blue Jackets
Columbus acquired one of the game's rising young stars. Sending four players and a draft pick to Chicago, the Jackets netted Brandon Saad. The 23-year-old had 23 goals and 29 assists last season and brings a wealth of playoff experience after having already won two Stanley Cups with the Blackhawks.

NBA first impressions

These youngsters are tearing up Summer League:

- Aaron Gordon, PF, Magic - Showing he's ready to leap past Channing Frye.
- Myles Turner, C, Pacers - With Roy Hibbert gone, the defensive-minded Pacers will count on Turner
- Rodney Hood, SF, Jazz - It's crowded on the wing in Utah, but Hood is miles ahead of the competition.

FATHER TIME HAS SLAPPED THESE GUYS

Peyton Manning won't see as many attempts in 2015. / GETTY IMAGES

Classic horseshoe pattern balding, a flat tire across the waist and an inability to recover from a night of alcohol abuse are signs that you're getting old. So is a declining skill set in football.

There are lots of problems with targeting "over the hill" players in fantasy drafts. The worst is paying a premium for a player's name even though their game isn't what it once was. Heightened injury risk and potential for a reduced role are other troubling complications. Avoid these guys with one foot in the grave.

Manning your coffin

Peyton Manning was a subaverage quarterback last season well before his Week 15 quad injury. The team saw it, reducing his responsibility in favor of a ground-based attack that averaged 29.2 running back carries per game over the final seven weeks. This offseason, run-centric play caller Gary Kubiak was brought in and the Broncos reportedly tried to trade Manning. Expect him to crumble down the stretch again this year (likely the final year of his career), meaning we are better off waiting until the later rounds for a Cam Newton, Matt Ryan, Tony Romo or Eli Manning type.

Rowdy no more

The artist formerly known as "Rowdy Roddy White" is now "Underneath Possession Target Roddy White." It doesn't quite have the same ring. Roddy's once indestructible body has failed him over the last two seasons and his effectiveness is waning sharply as well. Even when All-World "X" dominator Julio Jones missed a game last year, Harry Douglas got more targets from Matt Ryan. White, no longer a threat to defenses, will settle for a shallow role as Kyle Shanahan's "Z" while watching Julio rack up all the big plays.

The Bell tolls

Joique Bell has only been on the fantasy map for three seasons, but he's 28 years old and coming off multiple surgeries to his lower body. Joique has also averaged under 4 yards per carry in each of the last two seasons, and the Lions used a second-round pick on explosive Nebraska running back Ameer Abdullah. Bell isn't going to fall off the face of the Earth, but a passing of the feature-back baton to Abdullah at some point during the season is likely. The Lions, desperate to get production out of their run game, aren't going to get it from Bell.

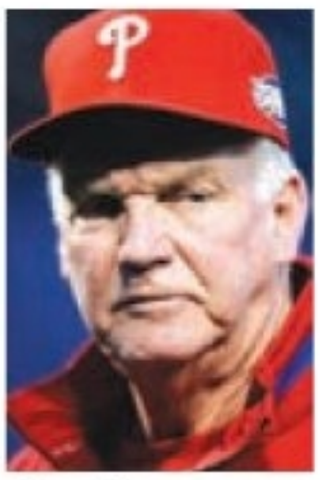
5 Best managers in history of the Phillies franchise

MLB. The ship ran the right route with these guys at the helm.

There is a lot of speculation on who the next manager of the Phillies will be. The search should involve everyone from established managerial veterans to recently retired players, some of them former Phils, looking for their first gig.

It won't be an easy task for the next guy as he will inherit a brutal roster, and he'll be looking to get his name placed alongside these men.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us



1 Charlie Manuel

The winningest manager in team history (by 186 games) also has the most playoff appearances, playoff victories, World Series appearances and, of course, is tied for most World Series victories, with one.

2 Pat Moran

Moran retired from playing with the Phillies in 1914 and was immediately named manager of a team that finished 20.5 games back in the NL, placing sixth out of eight teams.

He then immediately led them to the franchise's first pennant and World Series appearance in 1915. Pete Alexander won pitching's Triple Crown. They were ultimately beaten by a Boston Red Sox team that included Babe Ruth.

Moran's Phillies career included two more second-place seasons before Alexander was traded and World War I began.

3 Danny Ozark

Ozark held the club marks for both career wins and longest tenure before Manuel broke them, and it is Ozark whose career with the team is the most similar to Manuel's.

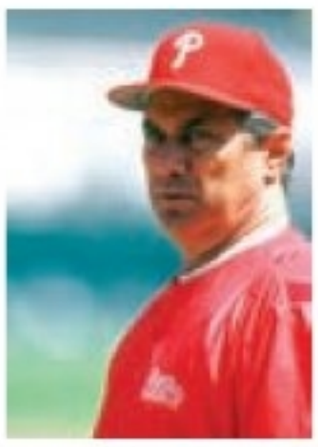
Ozark oversaw Mike Schmidt and Steve Carlton enter their primes with the team, and another parallel to the Manuel era can be drawn with the acquisition of Pete Rose to put the team over the top.

From 1976 to 1978, Ozark's team won the division each year and twice won 101 games, a club best that would only be beaten by, you guessed it, Manuel.

4 Dallas Green

The man who immediately replaced Ozark, Dallas Green, might deserve to be higher on this list as the man who shepherded the Phillies to their first World Series title in 1980. The accomplishment is even more impressive when you consider the distaste often expressed for the manager by his players.

He loses points for hanging around just a little over two seasons in Philadelphia and for leaving for the general manager's job in Chicago, taking half the team with him — most famously, a young Ryne Sandberg.



5 Jim Fregosi

Fregosi managed the team for six seasons and only had a winning record in one of them. That's not usually the kind of distinction you'd see on a list like this. But that 1993 team wasn't the kind of squad you'd usually see put together a winning season. And what a season it was.
